It will solve the fuel problem will make light and power little more expensive than air and water, and will rank Meyers as a genius of the first magnitude.

It was true that while Superintend ent Rynning was in control at Florence, he did not discover what Meyers had done. He seems to have known nothing about it—at least he never seems to have appraised the Meyers invention as it has been appraised by his successor. And the astonomy mything them into other forms of control of the party unquestioned.

As stated previously in The Review, Meyers is said to have invented an apparatus for capturing electrical waves from the air and transforming them into other forms of centrely. He is said to have perfected his invention to such an extent that he is running a twenty-five horse power engine with his apparatus, and there is no cost but the wear and tear on the machinery.
